

The Agora: Political Science Undergraduate Journal

Letter from the Senior Editors

*The Road goes ever on and on
Out from the door where it began.*
—J.R.R. Tolkien

This project started with a simple idea: political science undergraduates needed a space to submit, review, and ultimately publish some of their writing. However, turning that very simple vision into a reality turned into a major journey. Rules and guidelines had to be written, debated, and finalized; a website had to be created, polished, and put online; and articles had to be received, reviewed, and published in order for the editorial board's original idea to come to fruition. We are proud to say that vision has become a reality.

In order to make this happen, a dedicated group of volunteers spent countless hours labouring over an endless number of small details. Without their work, the latest edition of this publication would never have been possible. As such, we would like to take the time to offer our deepest gratitude to the rest of this year's editorial board—Mandi Deren-Dubé, Spencer Dunn, Kelly Freer, Claire Himsl, Jed Johns, and Kevin Pinkoski—who selflessly spent many hours working on this project. Their care, dedication, and expertise made this journal the great success that it is. One could hardly ask for better group of collaborators, colleagues, and friends with which to work whilst undertaking this long journey.

We would also like to take the time to wish the returning members of the editorial board—Mandi Deren-Dubé, Jed Johns, and Kevin Pinkoski—along with the board's newest members—Tara Audel, Neekoo Collett, Ashley Dallinger and Justin Selner—the best of luck. We are confident that we could not have left the journal in better hands. For us, the journey may be over, but for you it goes on. We look forward to enjoying many future editions.

Cofounders and Senior Editors,

Aaron Aitken and Brendon Legault.
