

Acknowledgements

Constellations would like to thank all of its supporters who have continued to support the journal in its second year of publishing. We would also like to extend our appreciation to new supporters who will carry the torch on the following year as leadership changes once again. I would personally like to thank my ever-faithful, creative, and hardworking co-editor, Noor Iqbal. Noor will assume the position of head History editor next year, in the company of Leah Brochu, our newest head editor of Classics. Noor's support and ideas over the last year have been invaluable to me. Noor has helped move this journal from its infancy and into an organization that ever increasingly seeks to support student work and provide a forum enabling students to engage with undergraduate research. I also want to tip the proverbial hat to Paul Gifford who was invaluable this year as our head Classics editor. Ever ready with insight and a good dose of to-the-point advice, Paul acted as Constellations own legal council in a way. Best luck to him on his future adventures in the legal world!

Constellations thanks its authors for believing in its cause and for the many hours spent editing and reworking your papers. You all provided outstanding articles this semester; I was thoroughly impressed by the quality and depth of thought and research poured into each submission. You are the reason Constellations thrives!

Thanks to the reviewers who carefully looked over submissions and engaged with student authors in a team effort to improve submissions. Your advice was very helpful to both the editing team and the authors themselves. Special thanks to our volunteer conference organizers Phil Stachnik and Yodit Tesfamicael who proved invaluable in planning, setting up, and the success of Constellations First Annual Conference. Thanks to all the conference presenters: keynote Dr. Guy Thompson and student authors Eve Coppinger, Tyler Dawson, Rory Fidler, Emily Lieffers, Suzanne Dawson, Justin J. Morris, Ellen Keith, and Christine Bold Clarke.

Constellations wishes to send our ongoing thanks to the Department of History and Classics, particularly journal publisher Melanie Marvin, for supporting Constellations and its first Conference. Melanie gave us critical support, allowing us to look at the event practically to ensure its success. Last, we would like to send our appreciation to journal advisor Jeremy Caradonna who was ever ready to meet and give advice for the next direction of Constellations as well as his confidence in the ability of students to successfully lead this organization. Finally, we appreciate you, the reader, for giving us your time and continuing the process of taking history out of the classroom--to make it speak louder on an increasingly meaningful level.
