Constellations would never have happened without the support it received. First of all, thanks to the journal advisor, Dr. Jeremy Caradonna, for his ongoing support, guidance and belief that this journal was a worthwhile endeavor. His patience, availability and willingness to help launch this project are truly appreciated. I want to thank the students who submitted their articles and who felt that this journal was a valuable addition to their undergraduate experience. I am sure that their belief in the journal will be a benefit to them. I want to thank my assistant editors, Emily Laroque and Sharon Rauser, who made this project possible with their hard work and dedication to even the most tedious of tasks. Thanks also to the reviewers and copy editors whose hard work reading, critiquing and enhancing the submissions was crucial to making Constellations a reality. I wish to acknowledge and thank Melanie Marvin for her technical savvy in creating the online journal and generally making sure things ran smoothly. Finally, I want to thank you, the reader, for taking the time to read, think about, and enjoy Constellations.
