

Editorial

Scholarly Publishing During a Pandemic

Lorie Kloda
Editor-in-Chief
Associate University Librarian, Planning and Community Relations
Concordia University
Montreal, Quebec, Canada
Email: lorie.kloda@concordia.ca

© 2020 Kloda. This is an Open Access article distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons-Attribution-Noncommercial-Share Alike License 4.0 International (<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-sa/4.0/>), which permits unrestricted use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided the original work is properly attributed, not used for commercial purposes, and, if transformed, the resulting work is redistributed under the same or similar license to this one.

DOI: 10.18438/eblip29792

---

The past few months have been a first for everyone. No one has experienced a pandemic of this scale, and we have all had to make significant adjustments to our work lives and personal lives that we never imagined having to make. For those of us fortunate enough to be in good health and to remain employed, we have had to alter our schedules, routines, and habits. Despite this enormous disruption in our day-to-day lives, the members of the Evidence Based Library and Information Practice Editorial Team managed to publish our previous issue in the middle of March, only a few days behind schedule.

Over the last three months, the Editorial Team, all volunteers with day jobs and lives disrupted by the pandemic, have continued to work to produce the latest issue of the journal before you. As the Editor-in-Chief, I am of course very proud of our team. I am also impressed by the contributions of the evidence summary writers, peer reviewers, and copyeditors who have continued to move the editorial process forward and to meet tight deadlines. These individuals increase the caliber of the journal submissions and continue to do so while handling current world events. The pandemic would have been an acceptable reason to step away from these additional volunteer responsibilities and yet no one did.

I want to thank all the people who are involved with the journal for their dedication, at all times but especially now.